Eddie's finger picking brings to mind the late Jerry Reed, whose notes told you everything you needed to know.

...guitar and vocal phrasing reminded me of Guy Clark.

Some artists create works with a subtle sense of place. Frank and Eddie Thomas overtly push that approach to the limit.

Inspiring in idea and execution.

A pair of Iuka (Mississippi) brothers decided to let music guide them, and that's made for quite a journey.

Eddie's songs come with stories, and he has that knack all good storytellers share: using the evocative detail.... As the light faded and the stained glass went inside-out, we heard enough good music to keep us humming through the next workweek.

Peek through the window then come inside for a listen...

With three CDs of original songs released in less than a year, brothers, Eddie and Frank Thomas are telling unique stories from a baby boomers' perspective. They grew up in the northeast Mississippi foothills of the Appalachian Mountains, and aren't sugar coating or over dramatizing their experiences. With a wide-eyed, mischievous but serious point of view they say, "The stories we'll be telling are all mostly true."

During a thirty-year, award-winning career as Thomasfilms, Inc., Eddie and Frank learned to paint pictures. Original sound tracks always personalized the Thomas brother's film and video productions, but Angels on the Backroads, a 4CD tribute to blues and jazz, took a different tact and moved the music to the forefront. Angels on the Backroads became a multimedia stage show that spanned 12 years and was featured on National Public Radio's Weekend Edition Sunday.

With guitar, bass and Southern accent they take you on an American journey of story and song through the eyes of brothers from Mississippi.

That's a peek... Now come on inside!

grab it with both hands!*

Blues in Britain

...a return trip to the UK by these hugely talented siblings is grossly overdue.
